The works entered in the Neville Public Museum's Art Annual reflect the broad spectrum of creative endeavors in this northeastern part of Wisconsin. They represented heritage, tradition, an affinity to nature, traditional crafts, strength in varied media, as well as commentary on contemporary culture.

The influence of a pandemic was an undercurrent in the submissions that could not be ignored. The creative approaches varied from ignoring the challenges to bring a bit of hope and light or attacking the challenges head on with reflection on their lasting effect.

I tried to examine intent. In some cases, it was the story that added to the decision of including the work. I understood that this exhibition was open to all levels, and I did my best to take that into account, which made some of the stories compelling.

In all, the exhibition represents a rich survey of current creative efforts in this part of Wisconsin, and it indeed provides a story of the area through these boundless creative directions. I am humbled for the honor to see this incredible output of creativity and grateful to the staff at the Neville Public Museum for the invitation to participate. Thank you.
